It is suggested that source be referred to an article in the February 13, 1970 edition of "The Washington Post" which states: "The Swiss expelled two Soviet diplomats, Nikolai Savine and Alexei Sterlikov, in what the federal prosecutor in Bern called one of the most serious espionage cases in Switzerland in recent years. The prosecutor said a third Soviet diplomat involved in the case, Alexander Gratchev, had left the country in December. The Soviets were accused of getting information and genuine Swiss papers for their agents from Marcel Buttex, a Swiss official who was in charge of immigration and residence permits in Lausanne. Buttex was arrested as a Soviet spy on February 3, (1970)."

If available, photographs and background information might be displayed to source.

WASHINGTON POST, 2/28/70

Swiss Arrest Woman

BERN—Switzerland announced that an unnamed woman who worked for the Zurich city administration has been arrested on espionage charges and linked her to a Soviet official named in a spy case earlier this month.

Officials said that the woman had contacts with the Soviet and Romanian embassies in Bern and had for a long time handed over documents including blank personal identity cards and residence permits. She was said to have confessed that she gave the Communists documents needed to smuggle agents into Switzerland and pass them off as Swiss.
